Appendix A. Selected Theater Glossary*

Abstract Realism: Theater works and performances that are grounded in realism but have nonrealistic elements and may not follow conventional plot and narrative structures. They often incorporate a nontraditional use of language and abstract theater devices. The works of Beckett, Pirandello and Ionesco may be defined as abstract realism.

Act: To represent, perform, interpret, communicate a character other than oneself; a major division of a play.

Actor: A person who performs a role or represents a character in a play, using vocal as well as physical techniques to bring the character to life.

Antagonist: The antagonist sets the conflict in motion by offering an obstacle to the protagonist’s objective.

Apron: The curved part of the stage that extends beyond the main curtain.

Arena Stage: Also called theater-in-the-round and central staging. There is seating on all sides of the stage.

Aside: The dramatic device in which a character speaks his/her thoughts aloud unheard by other characters onstage at the same time.

Audition: An action-oriented interview between director and actors for the purpose of deciding who will be cast in what role; usually involves script reading, performing a prepared monologue, and/or improvisation.

Backdrop: A painted piece of muslin hung from the battens to depict a scene.

Backstage: The designation also applies to the wings area and, loosely, can be used to indicate anything in the physical plant that is not stage or house.

Base Makeup: Applying base, highlights, and shadow to improve or alter the facial appearance for the stage.

Batten: A wood or metal pipe from which stage lights, drops and scenery are hung.

Blackout: Stage goes to complete black; the blackout lighting cue is often used for a startling effect at the end of a scene.

Blocking: The actor’s basic stage positioning given to the actor by the director or used in self-direction.

Blocking Symbols:
- X= Cross
- E=E= Entrance
- EX= Exit
- C= Center SR= Stage Right
- SL= Stage Left
- DC= Down Center
- DSR= Down Stage Right

Booms: A vertical pole on which horizontal arms can be mounted, carrying lighting instruments. Often used behind wings for side-lighting, etc. Sometimes known in the as a light tree.

Box Office Manager: A person in charge of selling the tickets for a production.

Box-Set: A two- or three-walled set representing the interior of a room; a feature of realistic theater.

Case Book: The collected research (i.e., photographs, reviews, essays, etc.) used by the dramaturge to help define the vision and intent of a particular dramatic work and its production.

Cast: 1. (verb) to assign the roles of a dramatic production to actors; 2. (noun) the group of actors with specific roles in a play or narrative.

Cat-Walk: A narrow bridge above the stage providing access to stage scenery or lighting units.

Character: A person or entity (e.g., animal) in a play, or the personality of that person or entity (e.g., animal).

Characterization: The art of developing the character (e.g., his/her life, emotions, choices, motivations, objectives).

Choices: The decisions of the actor, director, designer or playwright regarding how a character will be interpreted in a given production or work.

Choral Speaking: Reciting, in unison, a poem or piece of literature.

Chorus: In classical drama, the chorus was used to narrate offstage events.

Classical Theater: Typically Western theater from the periods of Greece and Rome through Shakespeare, Moliere and up to circa 1850; may also refer to ancient theater forms in non-Western theater. Most classical theater has an element of heightened or poetic language, and requires distinct vocal and physical acting styles. Sometimes referred to as “period plays.”

Collage Play: A theater piece incorporating devices of multiple perspective, forms and voices that can be centered on one or multiple events or themes. They are often compiled in a pastiche format of monologues, poems, stories, songs and scenes.

Commedia dell’Arte: The basic plots derived from Roman comedy, and the cast of stock characters including Arlecchino, Columbine, Pierrot, Pantalone, Pagliaccio, Pulcinello, and Scaramouche. The players appear in masks and costumes that became the convention for the genre (e.g., the black-and-white “domino” costume of Arlecchino).

Forms of Traditional Assessment

The nonperforming aspects of theater learning can be measured using traditional instruments that are shared with other subject areas. These may include:

- Written tests and quizzes on topics such as:
  - theater vocabulary and terminology
  - theater history
  - theater styles and genres
  - technical theater and stage craft

- Written work, such as:
  - descriptions of theater experiences.
  - personal responses to performances.
  - critical reviews of performances.
  - research papers on theater artists, periods, styles or genres in the context of society, culture, and general history.
  - reports, interviews, and job-shadow journals about theater and theater-related careers.
  - creative writing in response to or about theater.
  - personal or directorial mission statements in relation to a work of theater, blocking notations and other administrative paperwork associated with theater.

- Oral work, such as:
  - class presentations on theater subjects participation in class discussions

Forms of Alternative Assessment

When students participate in and respond to theater, reflect upon their experience, and revise their work using the methods below, teachers may collect the evidence to evaluate the teaching and learning in their classroom.

Performance Assessment:
Shows evidence of development of skills, projects or tasks.
- Comparing one theater performance with another.
- Engaging in dialogue with a jury.
- Recording theater tasks or performances (using video, blocking notation, written notes, drawings, etc.).
- Using standards or rubrics (teacher-generated or student-generated).
- Self-critiquing.
- Peer critiquing.
- Setting explicit goals for specific skills, projects or tasks.
- Setting personal goals

Perceptive Assessment:
Shows evidence of critical analysis to enhance performance.
- Discriminating.
- Describing.
- Identifying.
- Analyzing.
- Distinguishing.
- Comparing.
- Synthesizing.
- Using specialized theater vocabulary.
- Using graphic organizers, such as lists, webs and charts.

Reflective Assessment:
Shows evidence of understanding through self-reflection.
- Student journals.
- Rehearsing.
- Poetry in response to theater.
- Collecting ideas for theater.
- Sharing feelings, dreams and wishes about theater.
- Revising and reworking theater writings.
- Brainstorming with others about theater.
- Remembering/reminiscing about theater.
- Exit slips.

Appendix D. Assessment and Portfolio Tools
Here are some examples of the types of evidence teachers want to include in a student theater portfolio:

- Student’s individual goals (for theater growth, academic growth, and personal growth through theater).
- Teacher’s expectations (rules, guidelines, year-long/project goals, rubrics, theater standards).
- Videotape and photographs of student engaged in process and in performance during the beginning, middle and end of the year or project.
- Student’s class notes, reading notes, journals and reports.
- Student’s theater journal documenting personal growth and self-reflection.
- Completed class exercises, such as webs, artwork, or graphic organizers used for tasks.
- Completed theater homework assignments and research papers.
- Graded tests on theater subjects.
- Special recognition student has received (awards, citations, performance invitations, competition placements).
- Incidental correspondence or drawings the student may send to the teacher via the theater mailbox.
- Parent feedback, formal and informal.

For high school seniors:

- Student theater and personal résumé with cover letter.

By circling the level of a student's strength in various areas, both student and teacher can assess the student's strengths and areas that need attention.

Teachers can devise their own rubrics in greater or lesser detail according to the goals of their lesson, unit or year-long plan. Descriptive values (as shown) or numerical values may be assigned depending on the purpose of the scoring guide. Comparing a student’s rubrics over time yields a sense of overall progress.

For ideas about how to create various kinds of rubrics, go to websites such as:

Appendix E. What the Blueprint Means for School Leaders

All students deserve an excellent arts education, and the reorganization of the New York City Department of Education is an opportunity to recommit to that mission. One of the priorities of the reorganization is to look anew at how the arts are approached and taught across the city. This Blueprint outlines how teaching and learning in the arts should be implemented in New York City public schools, PreK–12.

School leaders can ask some simple but vital questions:

■ What is the place of the arts in our comprehensive educational plan (CEP)?
■ Do we have the staffing in place to support our arts goals? If not, what short- and long-term strategies can we use to implement an infrastructure for effective arts education?
■ How can we use ongoing assessment to help us improve our arts instruction?
■ Are parents meaningfully involved? If not, how can we help them become more aware of our students’ learning in the arts?
■ Are we taking advantage of the rich arts resources that New York City has to offer?
■ How can strategic arts partnerships help us advance teaching and learning in the arts?
■ Do our arts teachers, classroom teachers, and visiting artists have adequate professional development to carry out work that is developmentally appropriate and has artistic integrity? What can we do to support them?
■ What resources can the New York City Department of Education provide that would help us meet our goals?

In every school community, different agendas compete for time and resources. Schools are responsible for helping students learn to read and write, compute, investigate, explore, imagine, and create. Research supports the assertion that authentic work in the arts serve all of these goals, and New York City, through its commitment to a PreK–12 citywide arts curriculum, has made a major investment to ensure that there is equity and access to the arts for every child. Effective arts education can only be achieved with the commitment of school leaders.
Appendix F. What the Blueprint Means for Classroom Teachers

Interdisciplinary education enables students to identify and apply authentic connections between two or more disciplines and to understand essential concepts that transcend individual disciplines. —The Consortium of National Arts Education Associations*

Great teachers know the power of the arts to transform, motivate and inspire. Great arts teachers know the power of connecting their work to the teaching and learning in other subjects. Authentic connections reinforce the power and relevance of the arts, and add depth and dimension to studies in other disciplines.

Since this Blueprint is aimed at providing equitable access to an excellent theater education for all New York City public school students, it follows that teachers in theater and in other subjects can work together to help make this a reality. There are already many exemplary models for how teachers can infuse the arts into their general classroom work, many through partnerships with cultural institutions and others through school-based efforts. Successful collaborations generally involve interdisciplinary education and may take the following forms:

- Parallel Instruction: Teachers agree to focus on a common topic or theme but work on them separately. Example: An elementary classroom teacher teaching science and the theater teacher agree to examine the five senses in both their classrooms. Students are able to draw connections between these parallel experiences to reinforce learning in both science and theater.

- Cross-Disciplinary Instruction: Teachers agree to focus on a common theme, concept or problem. They plan together and often engage in team teaching. Example: A theater teacher, a literature teacher, and a social studies teacher at the middle school level work together to plan a unit of study focusing on and The Crucible by Arthur Miller and The Member of the Wedding by Carson McCullers, both of which explore issues of power and the interplay of American young women with adults. These collaborative experiences deepen students’ understanding of the content areas.

- Infusion: Teachers focus on the strong relationships among disciplines and commit to a deep and fruitful collaboration. Example: Theater and history teachers on the high school level plan a seminar involving both their disciplines. They focus on Global Studies and primary-source readings from the particular culture, including scripts, scenarios and other theater-related documents, so that students can draw shared meaning from both disciplines. The infusion could also incorporate a residency by an Asian theater or puppetry specialist.

In the Blueprint, the “Connections” strand of instruction suggests how theater and teachers can connect their work to other disciplines. Similarly, teachers of other subject areas can draw on the power of the arts to help their students delve deeper into the topics they study. General classroom teachers may be especially interested in this section. The Blueprint does not include examples of how themes or concepts from other disciplines might initiate joint projects, because its purpose is to demonstrate the power of what happens in the arts classroom. Joint planning at the local school level will generate many examples of how theater teachers and teachers from other subject areas can help create healthy, rich learning environments for their students. This Blueprint has been designed to encourage such collaborative endeavors in schools.

To help all students achieve to their potential, it is recommended that attention to different learning styles be addressed in all teaching strategies. Most of the suggested activities that appear in the New York City Department of Education Blueprint for Teaching and Learning in the Arts can be adapted to meet the needs of students and teachers in Special Education programs.

To ensure access and participation in theater classes, some students with disabilities may need services and supports to address their unique learning needs. Advance preparation may be needed to achieve equal access, especially for events taking place outside of the school.

Consultation may be necessary to make activities, events and classroom teaching happen smoothly and efficiently for Special Education students.

Appendix H. What the Blueprint Means for Parents

Children First, the city’s education reform program, is being implemented to improve teaching and learning in all New York City public schools. Already many innovations have been introduced:

- stronger instruction in reading, writing, and math;
- trained parent coordinators in every school; and
- a simpler, more streamlined structure to redirect resources directly to schools, where funds are most needed.

The arts must also become a rich and vital part of the school experience for every child. As parents and as families, you can help your child by being informed about arts education. This Blueprint outlines what theater education should look like for students in PreK-Grade 12. In addition to staying informed, there are several areas of arts learning in which parent participation is explicitly suggested, and others where it would be welcome. All the research about successful arts education indicates that parent involvement is crucial. There is a lot you can do at home to help children do their best in the arts. Here are just a few ideas:

- Share the rich arts traditions of your family and culture: sing to your child, dance, paint, draw, or tell stories you heard when you were young.
- Attend performances or visit museums with your child, taking advantage of the many family programs offered by New York City’s cultural institutions.
- Support your school’s arts programs by attending workshops or performances in the arts.
- Support the arts goals set by the school. In the preface material, you will find “A Guide to Implementing a Theater Program,” which lets you know what kind of theater arts instruction you should expect for your child. If these programs and indicators are not in place at your child’s school at the present time, you can start a conversation with your parent coordinator and the school staff by referring to this Blueprint. Parents, families, and communities have an important role in contributing to and supporting arts education in the schools. Arts educators and members of the arts community look forward to working with you to give every child in New York City equal access to an excellent education in the arts.
Appendix I. What the Blueprint Means for the Arts Community

The arts community of New York City is a vital element of the theater education of our youth. In recognition of its expertise, the Department of Education has asked theater and theater education organizations and teaching artists to actively participate in the creation of this Blueprint. No other major urban school system has a collaboration with its arts community on quite this scale. It is a groundbreaking initiative and a hallmark of this administration.

■ What does the Blueprint mean to arts organizations? The arts community has been represented by colleagues who have served tirelessly to assist the Department of Education in its work. Representatives from many arts organizations were invited to examine this Blueprint, give feedback to the committees whose task it was to refine it, and consider how this work will interact with their educational missions, programs, and offerings. As the Blueprint is implemented across New York City, it will strengthen and deepen the partnerships between the arts community, the schools, and the teacher preparatory programs at the city’s colleges and universities.

■ What does the Blueprint mean to teaching artists? Whether they are working independently or are employed by arts organizations, teaching artists are the practitioners who work with teachers and students in schools, and their relationship to the Blueprint will be critical. Understanding the educational goals of arts teachers and the schools in which they work will be vital to creating dynamic collaborations that maximize a school’s resources.

■ Will the Blueprint change the way the arts community works with schools? As the school’s commitment to the arts increases over the next few years, there will most likely be an even greater need for the participation of the arts community. As the “Community and Cultural Resources” strand indicates, even schools that have not had active theater programs will be asked to consider the strategic use of cultural and community resources to support arts learning. The joint work between the arts community and the schools also means that teaching practices will be examined. Because meaningful and ongoing professional development is required to engage teachers and artists in improving the work they do, the work will be planned collaboratively. It is the hope theater committees that the implementation of the Blueprint will lead to increased and improved arts education for New York City students, and that the arts community will play a vital and explicit role in its success.
Appendix J. What the Blueprint Means for the University Community

The Blueprint has been developed with the advice and counsel of the members of departments of theater and theater education on college campuses across our city. Since the success of teaching and learning in the arts is dependent upon the skill and competence of the theater teachers in the classroom, the university community is crucial to the future of arts education in our schools. It is crucial that theater education programs in our universities and colleges reflect and support this new Department of Education Blueprint so that future generations of theater educators will be prepared to provide exemplary theater instruction to our students. We look to them to integrate this document into the coursework and build upon this important work. We therefore invite our colleagues in higher education to continue with us in this effort to strengthen the work of school-based arts professionals toward a common framework of high expectations and rigorous content for our students.
